MA Description: The Institute for Art Theory and Media Studies at ELTE is currently the only higher institution of education in Hungary to offer an English-language MA degree in Film Studies.

The MA program runs with two specializations.

The Film Theory specialization offers a general overview of the history and theory of film, as well as critical understanding of the mechanisms and genres of popular film culture, with an emphasis on academic and critical writing. Students become familiar with the different periods of Hungarian and world film history, the different theoretical approaches of film studies and film genres, and develop their skills of reading theoretical texts and interpreting films.

The Filmmaking specialization allows students to get hands-on experience in the various creative areas of the production process (screenwriting, directing, editing, cinematography, production), and produce a collaborative thesis project.

In both specializations, students develop thesis projects (academic and creative) through consultation sessions with assigned advisers.
